As our world becomes more complex with new technology and more efficient ways of getting things done, so do new scams. Now the scammers are saying they represent the IRS, technical support, or even distant relatives. Most often these requests would be made to you by a method other than the telephone. Some of these requests, such as requests for technical support, would be made by you rather than others.

What can you do? Establish another method of contact (cell phone number, alternate email address, etc..) that is not publicly available. Check your computer and mobile devices regularly for malware. Check for suspicious charges to your credit card. Question charges that do not correspond to products or services you purchased. Don't trust caller ID or email addresses. Never trust the identity of somebody contacting you when you weren't expecting them. If you have been a victim of this type of scam, reporting it to agencies such as the FTC or calling 1.877.FTC.HELP will allow you to provide information to protect against future attacks on you and others.
